Scientific Interests

Dr. Longenecker's research interests focus on the relationship between cardiovascular and renal diseases, and their common risk factors in the population, including hypertension, diabetes, obesity, smoking, and hyperlipidemia in addition to novel risk factors such as lipoprotein(a), inflammations, and heart rate variability. As a Clinical Epidemiologist, he also is interested in the academic interface between Epidemiology and clinical practice, including themes in Clinical Epidemiology such as Evidence-Based Medicine, critical appraisal, diagnostic testing, study design, and application of epidemiologic and biostatistical methods to clinical research. He also has an interest in medical and administrative informatics, having designed and developed the Curriculum Management Platform database for use by the Health Sciences Center faculties. Currently, as Vice-Dean, Academic, for the new Faculty of Public Health, he is helping to establish the new faculty and its curriculum, with a view to providing Kuwait with a locally-trained Public Health and Community Services workforce.
